

Call for Book Chapter “Challenging Human Resources Management in Organisations Post-Covid”

1. Overview

It is anticipated that the aftermath of the pandemic will bring new challenges and change to the way work is organised and how people are managed. This will necessitate reflection on the best possible HR practices in the most diverse areas of intervention. Discussions with several experts about ongoing scientific research or organisational interventions will likely identify several paths to take regarding ways in which organisations might prepare for a post-pandemic phase.

2. Goals

Chapters submitted on the specified thematic areas must be original and should present a critical reflection based on scientific research or organisational interventions. These should be supported by literature review, from the perspective of previewing post-covid organisational contexts.

3. The nature of the publications

The chapters to be published will be blind-peer-reviewed and will undergo a submission phase of the Abstract of research/intervention in the contemplated thematic areas. Chapters will be accepted based on the relevance of their content as determined by the specified thematic areas. Although it must be an unpublished, original work, the author may reflect on a set of previously published works, provided that these are duly referenced. A chapter may also be submitted that reflects fully substantiated organisational interventions with expected or already achieved results. The review of the Abstract of the chapter submitted, and any subsequent request for revision and acceptance of the chapter, will be the responsibility of a Review Committee (in blind-review). The Chapters may be written in English or in Portuguese, respecting APA scientific paper format, organization and citation.
